one of the many mysteries of the "Graveyard of the Atlantic." The ship drifted off Ocracoke, and was reexposed by the 1944 hurricane.

Nearby is the spot where Blackbeard (Teach) was killed in 1718 while resisting capture by a Virginia expedition.

The Lighthouse at Cape Hatteras is the second one erected there. The first was authorized by Congress in 1794, was partially destroyed by a Federal fleet in 1861. The present lighthouse, which we visited Saturday, was built in 1870. It is 208 feet from foundation to roof-peak Normally, the light is visible out to twenty miles at sea. It is the tallest lighthouse in the U. S., and is ascended by 265 stair-steps.

A highlight of our journey down the Outer Banks was the ferry trip over Oregon Inlet. This inlet broke through the Banks during two severe storms in 1846. The first vessel to pass through the new inlet was named The Oregon, and that name was given to the inlet. Nine miles south are the remains of a bridge over an inlet which has since filled in.

POSTMAN BEFRIENDED

Petersburg, Va.- When patrons on the mail route of Walter E. Cheely, friendly mail carrier, heard that he had lost his wallet containing $150, they all chipped in, raised $150, and gave it to him.

HICCUPS IN DOUBLE TIME

Lubbock, Texas.- C. F. Wilson, who started hiccuping shortly after lunch on August 2, is now hiccuping several times a minute. This is the second time Wilson, 69, has been stricken with a seige of hiccuping. The first was 29 years ago. That time they lasted only seven days.

IN MEMORY of Mrs. L. E. Morris, who died August 27, 1952.
I miss you, dearest friend,
And I am living for the day,
When we can be together,
On the coming Judgment Day.
